JOSUAH HANCOCK;

*JEREMY REEVES; and

PHYLIS KIHUYU,

(Defendants)

The Plaintiff is guilty of "unclean hands". Through an invisible or seemingly non-affiliated third party, the Plaintiff placed his own copyrighted movie online in a fashion to make it readily available to persons for download. In this fashion he has found and then plucked IP address from an unlimited and indiscriminate amount of places off the internet, then claims they were infringing on his copyrighted material, when actuality they were not.

The Plaintiff is guilty of "unjust enrichment". He seeks to take advantage of copyright laws to collect booty and loot from the common citizen instead of using the copyright law to protect and promote the art of movie making and the ability to make money form the movies sale rather than from the movies copyright lawsuits.

The Plaintiff is guilty of "assumption of the risk". A ghost or seemingly unaffiliated third party has placed the Plaintiffs movie onto the internet for him. Since an entity affiliated with the Plaintiff placed his movie onto the internet in a fashion to make it readily available for download, the Plaintiff assumes the risk of anyone downloading it and has waived his right to any copyright protections for it.

The plaintiff is guilty of "misuse of product". Instead of placing the movie online to profit from its sales, the Plaintiff has placed the movie online to profit through copyright protection lawsuits, by alleging the illegal downloads of a movie he put up for download.
